BUILD

create your desktop divs using html and css then make it responsive

The screenshot shows the Chrome DevTools interface with several tabs open:

- Elements: Shows the DOM tree. The body tag has attributes: data-new-gr-c-s-check-loaded="14.1086.0" and data-gr-ext-installed="S0". It contains two divs with classes "half1" and "half2", which are flex containers. The "half2" div includes a script tag with a watermark button.
- Styles: Shows the CSS styles for the body element. It includes media queries for screens up to 500px, setting the width and height to 100vh and displaying flex. It also includes a style.css rule for the body and a user agent stylesheet rule.
- Layout: Shows a detailed outline of an element, indicating dimensions of 485x969 pixels, margins, borders, and padding.

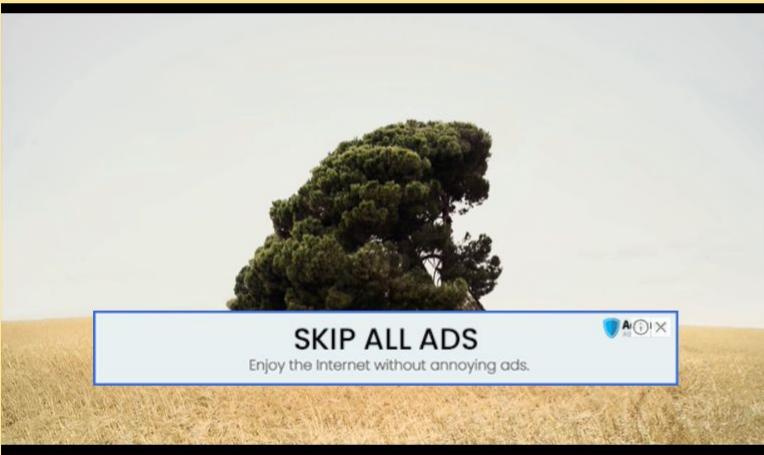

The bottom of the interface features a news banner for the "Highlights from the Chrome 107 update", specifically mentioning the "Object highlighting in the Memory Inspector" and a "new" setting for instant DOM search.
